I. About the Venue

The Detroit Opera House, originally opened in 1922 as the Capitol Theater, is a historic venue designed by C. Howard Crane. It was Detroit's first movie palace and seated over 3,300 people. Over the decades, the venue went through several name changes and periods of closure. In 1986, it closed as the Grand Circus Theatre. Michigan Opera Theatre acquired and renovated the venue, and it reopened as the Detroit Opera House in 1996.

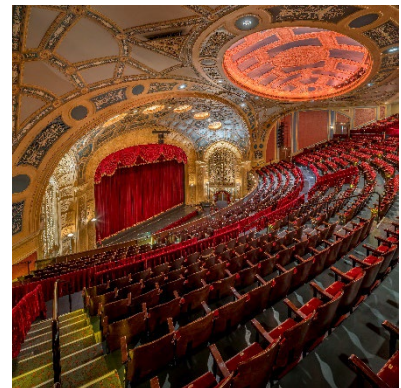

Today, Detroit Opera is the resident company for producing opera, presenting dance, and promoting a wide variety of comedy, music acts, and other major events in one of the most acoustically impressive and visually beautiful historic houses in the country.
